Every section, in English and Arabic, against the master library.

75 English pages and their 75 Arabic editions. Each content section is matched to its master, checked for the instance tag, and its Arabic twin compared node by node.

How a master UI change reaches a page

- Look and behaviour flow automatically. Every section here uses master classes styled by ds.css and driven by ds.js, so a UI change to a master reaches every page that uses it, tagged or not, in English and Arabic.
- The tag is how we find them. `data-master` marks a section as an instance so audits, search and re-pastes can find it. Untagged sections still update, but they are invisible to the audit.
- Markup changes need a re-paste. If a master's HTML structure changes, tagged instances are the list to re-paste.
- Arabic follows automatically. Arabic pages are generated from English with the same markup, so they inherit every UI change and every tag.

Arabic edition checks

- 525 of 525 sections structurally identical to English (tags, classes, behaviours; only text and labels differ).
- 522 of 522 instance tags carried over.
- Runtime: every Arabic page loads the same ds.css and ds.js as English, plus rtl.css for a few legacy page elements only. Component RTL lives in ds.css, shared with the library's RTL preview.
- Legacy page CSS (does not follow masters): home (cib-home-flow, global-reach, cib-home-final-v2) and Payments & Trade Finance (global-reach-light), in both languages.
